

Welcome to the group visitor information for the Great Laxey Wheel, the world's largest waterwheel and Mines Trail. Here you will find everything you need to plan a visit.

The Great Laxey Wheel is the largest surviving working waterwheel of its kind in the world. Designed by the Victorian engineer, Robert Casement, the wheel was built in 1854 to pump water from the Glen Mooar part of the Great Laxey Mines industrial complex. The impressive 22m (72.5 feet) diameter structure found immediate popularity and has remained one of the Island's most dramatic tourist attractions for over 150 years. A climb to the top of the wheel is rewarded with breath-taking views across the valley, while the mines trail displays the remains of a once thriving mines complex and offers a pleasant walk through Glen Mooar, together with an opportunity to enter a section of the mine.

Don't miss:

- Seeing the magnificence of the Great Laxey Wheel and her workings up close
- Stories of the Laxey Miners
- Panoramic views from the top of the wheel
- The chance to go into the old mine adit
- A walk through the stunning Glen Mooar Valley
- The Compressor House
- The chance to get some great photos of this unique piece of history and Victorian ingenuity
